Dear Octopus Energy.

I'm sorry but this letter is a big moan! Please take it seriously.

For the 2nd time you recently took an unauthorised amount from my bank account - using a direct debit.
As per our previous conversations, the agreed amount is £300 per month.
You recently took £450 from the account.

Accordingly I have cancelled the direct debit as I cannot - it appears - trust you.

However I'm prepared, one last time, to put this down to some sort of error.

However please note if it happens again I will formally complain and WILL escalate to the ombudsman.

However that's not necessary this time - so long as you respond to this email and explain what is going on.
Given this is the second time I've had to deal with that - clocking up two hours now writing emails - I feel you should compensate me for wasting my time. £50.00 would seem appropriate. You can credit to the account. However please let me know.

Please note the DD will remain cancelled until I have a satisfactory response.

Please also note I will not accept any changes of tariff etc. caused by withdrawel of the DD - etc. Such action by yourselves would trigger a formal complaint.

But really, we don't need to go there - do we?

I look forward to hearing from you regarding this matter, and hope we can resolve it without the need for further escalation.

Kind regards (for now!),

Mark Collins-Cope.
